New Co-Editors Strive to Make JACI “One-Stop” Journal for All Aspects of Allergy and Immunology

Introducing the New JACI Co-Editors-in-Chief

Cezmi A. Akdis, MD, FAAAAI, and Zuhair K. Ballas, MD, FAAAAI, have been chosen to serve as the next JACI Co-Editors-in-Chief. Having a European-based Editor-in-Chief in addition to a U.S.-based Editor-in-Chief is a historic first for the journal and reflects an increased international appeal.

Akdis is Director of the Swiss Institute of Allergy and Asthma Research and a Professor with the Zurich University Medical Faculty. He has been a JACI Associate Editor since 2007, has served on the JACI Editorial Board, and has also been involved on the Editorial Boards of several journals.

Our approach is that JACI is a global journal that should have a global impact on all aspects of our specialty. We will continue to publish high impact science, but will also anticipate the changing nature of our specialty, and will include those topics that are expected to become an integral part of the practice of allergy and clinical immunology over the next five to 10 years,” Akdis and Bailas explained.